
CAMBRIDGE CLASSICAL TEXTS AND COMMENTARIES

EDITORS

J. DIGGLE N. HOPKINSON J. G. F. POWELL
M. D. REEVE D. N. SEDLEY R. J. TARRANT

37

PLATO: CLITOPHON

PLATO

CLITOPHON

EDITED WITH INTRODUCTION,
TRANSLATION AND COMMENTARY

BY

S. R. SLINGS

Professor of Greek Language and Literature, Vrije Universiteit, Amsterdam

PUBLISHED BY THE PRESS SYNDICATE OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE
The Pitt Building, Trumpington Street, Cambridge, United Kingdom

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge CB2 2RU, UK
<http://www.cup.cam.ac.uk>
40 West 20th Street, New York NY 10011-4211, USA
<http://www.cup.org>
10 Stamford Road, Oakleigh, Melbourne 3166, Australia

© Cambridge University Press 1999

This book is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 1999

Printed in the United Kingdom at the University Press, Cambridge

Typeset in Baskerville 11/13 pt [A0]

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

Library of Congress cataloguing in publication data

Plato.

[Clitophon. English]

Plato, Clitophon / edited with introduction, translation, and commentary by S. R. Slings.

p. cm. — (Cambridge classical texts and commentaries ; 37)

Includes bibliographical references and indexes.

ISBN 0 521 62368 5 (hardback)

1. Justice (Philosophy) — Early works to 1800. 2. Plato.

Clitophon. I. Slings, S. R. II. Title. III. Series.

B391.C52E5 1999

184—dc21 98-52085 CIP

ISBN 0 521 62368 5 hardback

FOR HANNEKE

οὐδείς γὰρ ἡμῶν ἑαυτῶι ζῆι καὶ οὐδείς ἑαυτῶι ἀποθνήσκει.
ἐάν τε γὰρ ζῶμεν
τῶι κυρίωι ζῶμεν·
ἐάν τε ἀποθνήσκωμεν
τῶι κυρίωι ἀποθνήσκομεν· ἐάν τε οὖν ζῶμεν ἐάν τε ἀποθνήσκωμεν, τοῦ κυρίου ἐσμέν.

CONTENTS

Preface	page ix
Abbreviations	xiii
INTRODUCTION	I
I Prolegomena to the dialogue	I
1.1 Introduction	I
1.2 Summary and analysis of composition	5
1.3 Is the Clitophon unfinished?	10
1.4 The Clitophon as a Short Dialogue	18
1.5 The characters of the dialogue	35
II Meaning and authenticity	58
II.1 Philosophical protreptic in the fourth century BCE	59
II.2 Protreptic in the Clitophon	93
II.3 Protreptic in Plato	127
II.4 Elenchos in the Clitophon	164
II.5 Justice in the Clitophon	180
II.6 The meaning of the Clitophon	209
II.7 Date and authenticity	215
TEXT AND TRANSLATION	235
COMMENTARY	261
APPENDICES
I The ending of Aristotle's Protrepticus	336
II Note on the text	340

CONTENTS

BIBLIOGRAPHY	345
INDEXES	352
1 Literary and philosophical index	352
2 Grammatical index	353
3 Index of Greek words	353
4 Index of passages cited	355

PREFACE

An earlier version of this book was a privately published doctoral dissertation of the Free University at Amsterdam (Academische Pers, 1981). At the time, I intended to produce a less provisional edition of it as soon as possible. My aim was to give the Clitophon a more secure position within the development of ancient philosophical protreptic.

However, other duties prevented me from realising this project. It was not until 1995 that I had the opportunity of studying protreptic once again (cf. my paper 'Protreptic in ancient theories of philosophical literature'). By then, it was clear to me that the most I could hope for was an opportunity for publishing a revised edition of the 1981 thesis.

For this reason, I owe a lasting debt of gratitude to my friend and colleague, Professor Jaap Mansfeld of the University of Utrecht, who very kindly suggested to the editors of the series 'Cambridge Classical Texts and Commentaries' that they should take a revised version of the book into consideration; likewise to the editors of CCTC for accepting it. I feel particularly privileged that this is the first commentary on a Platonic text to appear in this distinguished series.

The board of the Faculty of Letters of the Free University at Amsterdam financed the computerising of the book. It has been a particular stroke of luck that my pupil, Ms Josselijn Boessenkool, consented to undertake this laborious task. If it had not been for her unequalled competence and precision, the publication of this edition would have taken up much more time and required much more labour. I am very grateful that the board of the Fondation Hardt pour l'étude de l'antiquité classique allowed me a four-week sojourn in the summer of 1997, which permitted me to lay a solid foundation to the book as it presently is.

PREFACE

For the same reason, I thank Professor David Sedley, who very graciously enabled me to work at the Cambridge University Library for a couple of days in October 1997.

I have greatly profited from a number of conversations with Professor Sedley. Professor James Diggle sent me a number of highly salutary notes, which have stimulated me to think some of the problems through once again.

My former colleague Dr Pauline Allen corrected the English of the first version of this book; Professor Sedley has suggested numerous improvements for this one. I am, of course, responsible for such blemishes as remain. During the final stages, Pauline Hire, Susan P. Moore, Caroline Murray and my colleague Dr J. G. M. van Dijk have been extremely helpful in drawing my attention to various mistakes and inconsistencies.

But above all, I am grateful to two scholars of the Free University. The late G. J. de Vries taught me most of what little I understand about Plato and Platonic Greek. Professor D. M. Schenkeveld (emeritus) supervised my thesis, and if the exposition of my views throughout this book is even passably understandable, most of the credit should go to his acute observations, and his constant insistence on his promovendi making clear what they want to do, why they want to do it, and how they do it. If this book had not already been dedicated to the memory of someone else, it should certainly be dedicated to him. I'm very proud to be his successor in the chair of Greek in the University which we have both been honoured to serve for most of our lives.

The first version of this book appeared under the title A Commentary on the Platonic Clitophon. As will be clear from section 11.7.3 of the Introduction, I no longer have any strong doubts about the authenticity of this work, even though I still cannot shake off all my misgivings. But I now feel that the grounds for my doubts are rather weak, and I have no compunction in presenting this revised version as Plato: Clitophon. I am particularly grateful to Professor Sedley, who was instrumental in bringing about this change of mind. But no matter if this dialogue is authentic or not, the most important question is its literary and philosophical intention – while rereading what I wrote seventeen years ago, I have felt that my interpretation of it did not require major changes.

PREFACE

Indeed, when I compare the Urtext of this book with the vast amount of work on Plato published during the nineties, I feel sustained by the fact that most of my conclusions are shared by many excellent Platonists today, even though only a tiny minority of them have, I suppose, bothered to read what was after all a minor book on a minor and suspect dialogue.

My dissertation contained a separate chapter on the MSS of the Clitophon. I have decided to suppress this – a highly condensed version is here presented as ‘Appendix II’. At the time, I did not have photographs of all MSS at my disposal (see my paper ‘Supplementary notes’). The textual tradition of the Clitophon is hardly different from that of the Republic, for which we now have the brilliant monograph of my pupil, Dr G. J. Boter (The Textual Tradition of Plato’s Republic). It is very gratifying that my thesis should have started a spate of fundamental studies on the MS transmission of Platonic dialogues – nearly all of these studies are based on the first version of the present book, which obviously found its way into most of the major academic libraries throughout the world. But a rehash of my work as published in 1981 would be pointless in 1999. I have, however, made a fresh collation of ADF – from photographs, unfortunately, not from these MSS themselves. This re-examination has prompted me to change the apparatus in quite a few places.

A short time ago, the Clitophon was being described as a ‘jewel’ – admittedly in my hearing, and by someone who had read the first version of my commentary. I am just as aware as anyone that it is not an unflawed jewel. Yet I hope that this book will contribute to its being considered worthy of being inserted in the crown – if not, that it will be taken as a serious and in some aspects unique representative of fourth-century philosophical literature.

PREFACE

Amsterdam

S. R. S.

ABBREVIATIONS

- Ast F. Ast, Platonis quae exstant opera . . . recensuit, in linguam Latinam convertit . . . F.A. IX (Lipsiae 1827), 354–65
- Bekker I. Bekker, Platonis dialogi Graece et Latine II 3 (Berolini 1817), 465–74 (with Ficinus' translation)
- Bertini G. M. Bertini, 'Saggio sul Clitofonte', RFIC I (1873) 457–80
- Burnet J. Burnet, Platonis opera IV, Oxonii 1902
- Bury R. G. Bury, Plato, with an English Translation (London–Cambridge (Mass.) 1929), 311–27
- Ficinus see Bekker
- Gildersleeve B. Gildersleeve, Syntax of Classical Greek (New York 1900–11)
- Gonzalez F. J. Gonzalez, 'Clitophon', in: J. M. Cooper–D. S. Hutchinson, Plato, Complete Works (Indianapolis 1997), 966–70
- GP² J. D. Denniston, The Greek Particles (Oxford 1954²)
- Hermann C. F. Hermann, Platonis dialogi III (Lipsiae 1851), 459–64; VI (Lipsiae 1853), 330–1 (scholia)
- HGPh W. K. C. Guthrie, A History of Greek Philosophy (Cambridge 1962–78)
- KG R. Kühner–B. Gerth, Ausführliche Grammatik der griechischen Sprache. Zweiter Teil: Satzlehre (Hannover–Leipzig 1898–1904)
- LSJ H. G. Liddell–R. Scott–H. Stuart Jones, A Greek–English Lexicon (Oxford 1940⁹)
- la Magna G. la Magna, Platone, Clitofonte, con introduzione e commento (Naples 1935)
- Modugno G. Modugno, Platone, le Opere tradotte e di-

ABBREVIATIONS

- chiarate ad uso di ogni persona colta* XIX (Aquila 1930), 129–49
- MT W. W. Goodwin, Syntax of the Moods and Tenses of the Greek Verb (London 1912³)
- Müller H. Müller, Platon's sämtliche Werke. Übersetzt von H. M., mit Einleitungen begleitet von K. Steinhart VII 1 (Leipzig 1859), 47–74
- New Approaches* A. Rijksbaron (ed.), New Approaches to Greek Particles. Proceedings of the Colloquium Held in Amsterdam, January 4–6, 1996, to Honour C. J. Ruijgh on the Occasion of his Retirement (Amsterdam 1997)
- Orwin C. Orwin, 'Cleitophon [or, Exhortation]', in: T. L. Pangle (ed.), The Roots of Political Philosophy. Ten Forgotten Socratic Dialogues, Translated, with Interpretive Studies (Ithaca–London 1987), 111–16
- PW A. Pauly–G. Wissowa et al., Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Altertumswissenschaft (Stuttgart 1893–1978)
- Sartori F. Sartori, Platone, Dialoghi v (Bari 1956) 2–10
- Schanz M. Schanz, Platonis opera . . . edidit M.S. IX (Lipsiae 1885), 90–5; 102–3 (critical appendix)
- Schleiermacher F. Schleiermacher, Platons Werke II 3 (Berlin 1809), 453–64 (translation); 534 (notes)
- Schw.–D. E. Schwyzer–A. Debrunner, Griechische Grammatik, II Syntax und syntaktische Stilistik (Munich 1950)
- Souilhé J. Souilhé, Platon, Œuvres complètes XIII 2 (Paris 1930), 163–90
- SSR G. Giannantoni, Socratis et Socraticorum reliquiae (Naples 1990–1)
- Stallbaum G. Stallbaum, Platonis dialogi; textum ad

ABBREVIATIONS

- fidem Codicum ... recognovit G.S. ...* VIII (Lipsiae 1825), 227–34 (text); XII (Lipsiae 1825), 496–9 (critical apparatus)
- Steinhart see Müller
- Susemihl F. Susemihl, Platon, Werke in 40 Bändchen v 3–6 (Stuttgart 1865), 507–29
- Two Studies* C. M. J. Sicking–J. M. van Ophuijsen, Two Studies in Attic Particle Usage: Lysias and Plato (Leiden 1993)
- Waterfield R. Waterfield, ‘Cleitophon’, in: id., Plato, Republic (Oxford 1993), 462–8
- de Win X. de Win, Plato, Verzameld werk v (Antwerpen–Baarn 1978²) 469–75 (translation); 495 (notes)
- Zuretti C. O. Zuretti, Platone, Dialoghi v (Bari 1915), 3–21

INTRODUCTION

I PROLEGOMENA TO THE DIALOGUE

1.1 Introduction

Whereas a commentary on the Clitophon requires no justification – for there is none in either Latin or any of the three major European languages of our time, its scale as offered here does call for an excuse. The Clitophon has often been dubbed a ‘riddle’, and so it is. Its authorship is dubious – a decision as to its authenticity would seem to depend mainly on the interpretation of its meaning. Its meaning is therefore a problem prior to (and more interesting than) its authorship. In this connection several questions come to one’s mind.

The Clitophon is mainly an attack on Socrates. Is this the Athenian philosopher who inspired a great number of thinkers, was ridiculed by Aristophanes and other comedians and was eventually put to death, or is he the literary character who plays the central part in many fourth-century philosophical texts of a genre called λόγος Σωκρατικός from Aristotle onwards?

This Socrates is said to be an expert in what is called προτρέπειν (I shall translate this throughout the book by ‘exhort’, for lack of a better equivalent). How does this statement relate to several works, called Προτρεπτικός, by pupils of the Athenian philosopher, to an interesting passage of Xenophon’s Memorabilia (1.4.1) which is programmatic for the whole of the rest of that work, and finally to certain passages in Plato where this activity of Socrates’ is described or hinted at? As a corollary, what is the relation of these passages to Plato’s literary production as a whole?

The criticism is uttered by one Clitophon, who we are told is at the same time rather enthusiastic about the teaching of Thrasymachus. In Book 1 of Plato’s Republic this character appears as a companion and defender of Thrasymachus. To what extent is this significant for the interpretation of Republic 1 and Clitophon? What further light is shed on this problem by the similarity of statements in the Clitophon about the result (ἔργον) of justice to statements about justice in Republic 1?

Clitophon gives an extensive report of his questioning Socrates' companions and refuting them. What is this method of interrogation and refutation; how close does it come to methods observed in other Socratic literature and what are the implications of the similarity for the intention and philosophical provenance of our dialogue?

I have tried to answer these questions without any regard to the problem of authorship. Unless I have gravely deceived myself, it is possible to explain the Clitophon from the Clitophon itself; such other Socratic texts as I have deemed profitable to take into account have been used either to test the hypotheses formed on the basis of the Clitophon alone, or, occasionally, to answer questions for which I found no satisfactory answers in the text of the dialogue. In general, I do not think that this strictly 'ergocentric' method is imperative in Plato – on the contrary, the written work is called an εἰδότηων ὑπόμνησις in the Phaedrus, so that in genuine dialogues a comparative method of interpretation seems to be called for. However, the authenticity of the Clitophon has been doubted by many eminent scholars from the early nineteenth century onwards; I have therefore left aside the attribution of the dialogue to Plato, which normally in literary analysis one is obliged to take into account. It has become a platitude to say that in cases of disputed authenticity the onus probandi lies with those who want to dispute it – in fact, this is far from being a dogma¹ – but one should not add to the burden by forming hypotheses based on related texts transmitted within the same Corpus.

¹ Cf. the remarks in Pseudepigrapha 1 (Entretiens Hardt 18 (1971)), 12 (R. Syme); 149 (G. J. D. Aalders), where an exception is made for texts

The Introduction and the Commentary together contain my interpretation of the Clitophon; the questions raised above will be found treated there. Because I find the questions difficult and rather involved, the arguments for my answers take up a fair amount of space and are scattered throughout the book. Therefore I shall outline here, without further argument, such sense as I can make of this dialogue.

The Clitophon is essentially a condemnation not of Socrates, nor of another philosopher, but of a specific branch of Socratic literature, to wit philosophical protreptic in its pre-Aristotelian, ethical form. The speech put into Socrates' mouth is a parody² (as Aspasia's speech in the Menexenus is generally supposed to be), in which various motifs of this genre are used; it is a parody of thoughts, not of one particular writer. The author is careful not to hit at the core of Socratic philosophy; it is the uselessness of protreptic preaching which is the target, not its ethical values. The choice of Clitophon, admirer of Thrasymachus, as the main character suggests how dangerous protreptic can be.

belonging to a genre which as a whole is open to suspicion. If there is indeed such a genre as the Short Dialogue (section 1.4), these remarks are relevant for the Clitophon. – K. Dover, Marginal Comment (London 1994), 139 speaks of 'the disastrous principle "presumed genuine until proved spurious"', but gives no arguments for this somewhat extreme view.

² I have not tried to define this term. Though I am aware of its deficiencies, I think the following definition is satisfactory, and any rate for Clit.: 'Parodie ist Nachahmung mit Polemik gegen den Nachgeahmten' (R. Neumann, 'Zur Ästhetik der Parodie', Die Literatur 30 (1927–8) 439–41; for criticism, cf. W. Karrer, Parodie, Travestie, Pastiche (Munich 1977), 36–41). My use of the term is therefore much more traditional than that of some recent theoreticians, notably Bakhtin. Cf. P. Morris (ed.), The Bakhtin Reader (London 1994), 102–22. Bakhtin's influence is notable in A. W. Nightingale, Genres in Dialogue. Plato and the Construct of Philosophy (Cambridge 1995), esp. 6–8; 148–9.

Clitophon's interrogation of Socrates' companions and – to a lesser extent – of Socrates himself serves a double purpose: it proves that mere exhortation towards justice does not lead to knowledge of justice (various discussions of justice are taken over from Socratic literature, not exclusively protreptic literature; these borrowings are not meant to suggest that Socratic theories about justice are worthless); at the same time it is shown that elenchos, not exhortation, leads to insight (and thereby to knowledge).

The author's judgement on the respective effectiveness of exhortation and elenchos is identical to Plato's standpoint. The use of elenchos in the Clitophon is typically Platonic. Moreover, the author implies that he assents to an important aspect of Plato's concept of justice, namely that the true politician is he who renders his fellow-citizens more just. In short, the author's intention is to show that his opinion of Socratic literature conforms in every respect to the views found in Plato's literary production, which is, by implication, recommended as a better alternative for protreptic.

In the Commentary, I have endeavoured not only to elucidate questions connected with structure, intention, expression and textual transmission (in so far as these matters have not been treated systematically in the Introduction), but also to furnish material for settling the questions of authorship. I have adduced many parallels for words, phrases and constructions which in themselves needed no illustration, in order to show how these idioms relate to the usage of Plato, to whom the Clitophon is ascribed. As I found that, on the whole, the language of our dialogue is very similar to Plato's, I saw no point in increasing the bulk of annotations by referring (more than occasionally) to parallels found in the works of other authors of this period. It goes without saying that apart from the TLG CD-ROM, Brandwood's Word Index (but also Ast's Lexicon) has been an invaluable support.

In a limited number of cases, I was unable to refrain from treating questions of grammar and lexicon on a more general scale, even though a commentary is not necessarily the best place for having one's say on such matters.

1.2 Summary and analysis of composition

The nineteenth-century division into chapters (Roman numerals), which was abandoned in Burnet's edition, has been reintroduced because on the whole it does justice to the structure of the Clitophon.

A. PROLOGUE (406a1–407a4)

I. Socrates says someone told him that, in a conversation with Lysias, Clitophon had criticised Socrates' intellectual guidance and praised that of Thrasymachus. – That is not quite right, Clitophon answers; in part I have indeed not praised you, but in part I did do so. He offers to expound his position. – Socrates gives him the opportunity, hoping to benefit from his words.

B. CLITOPHON'S REPORT (407a5–410b3)

(1) CLITOPHON'S PRAISE (407a5–408c4)

(a) Introductory words (407a5–b1)

II. Clitophon says that he has been struck whenever Socrates delivered a certain speech like a deus ex machina:

(b) Socrates' protreptic (407b1–408b5)

(first part; 407b1–e2) 'Men do not act as they should, because they focus all their attention on amassing wealth, but neglect to provide their sons, who will inherit it, with the knowledge how to use it justly; they do not find them teachers of justice, if such there be, nor have they taken care of themselves similarly in the past. They and their children have followed the traditional curriculum, and they are none the less vicious in matters of money – therefore present education is to be condemned. Discord in the world stems from disharmony, not musical but spiritual. When men say that injustice is the consequence not of bad education but of a free choice, they contradict themselves, as they also think that injustice is hateful to the gods. If man is mastered by his pleasures, he is so involuntarily. Consequently each individual and each state ought to care more in this respect than they do now.’

(III. Interrupting his report, Clitophon again states his admiration, 407e3–4.)

(second part; 407e5–8) ‘Those who care only for their bodies and neglect their souls act likewise: they neglect the ruling part.’

(third part; 407e8–408b5) ‘What one cannot handle, one should leave alone, so with the senses and the whole body; likewise, one who cannot handle his own lyre will not be able to handle his neighbour’s. Finally, one who does not know how to handle his soul had better leave it alone and cease to live, or at any rate be a slave and hand over the rule of his mind to an expert.’ These experts are identified by Socrates with those who have learned politics, which is identical to judication and justice.

(c) Concluding words (408b5–c4)

IV. Clitophon quite agrees with this and similar speeches and considers them very suitable for exhortation and very useful.

(2) CLITOPHON’S CRITICISM (408c4–410b3)

(a) Introduction (408c4–409c1)

Therefore he asked those companions whom Socrates esteemed most how Socrates’ exhortation is to be followed up, supposing that exhortation itself is not the goal of life. After Socrates’ fashion, he offers an analogy: one who had exhorted them to the care of the body would reproach them on the grounds that they care only for agrarian products instead of the arts which improve the body. Which art is it that improves the soul?

V. The man who seemed best equipped answered that this art is none other than justice. Clitophon wished to hear more than a name. Medicine has a double effect, the production of new doctors and health (of which the latter is a result of the art, not art itself), and likewise carpentry can be divided into doctrine and result. Similarly justice will on one hand produce new just men, on the other it must have a result of its own. What is the latter?

(b) First definition of the result of justice (409c1–d2)

This pupil answered ‘the beneficial’, others, ‘the fitting’, ‘the useful’, ‘the profitable’. Clitophon replies that all these epithets are also valid for the results of each of the arts, such as carpentry; but the meaning of these epithets will be defined by the arts in question; let the result of justice be defined similarly.

(c) Second definition of the result of justice (409d2–410a6)

VI. Finally the most elegant answer given was: to effect friendship in the cities. Friendship was said by this man to be always a good, so that the friendships of children and animals (which as a result of a debate he concluded were more often harmful than beneficial) had to be excluded: real friendship was concord. Being asked whether concord was unanimity in opinion or knowledge he rejected the former, as being often harmful. At this point those present were able to accuse him of circular reasoning: medicine, too, is concord in this sense, but unlike the arts, justice has still failed to grasp the object of its knowledge; its result is yet unclear.

(d) Third definition of the result of justice (410a7–b3)

VII. Then Clitophon asked Socrates himself, who answered that the special result of justice was harming one’s enemies and benefiting one's friends. Subsequently it turned out that justice never harms anyone.

C. CLITOPHON'S VERDICT (410b3–e8)

(a) Criticism (410b3–c8)

Having endured this a long time, Clitophon has given up. He thinks that Socrates is still the best in exhorting others to justice but either he can do nothing more, like a layman who can eulogise steersmanship – this is not Clitophon's view, but either Socrates does not know what justice is or he is unwilling to impart his knowledge to Clitophon. That is why Clitophon visits Thrasymachus and others: he is at a loss.

(b) Last appeal (410c8–e5)

If Socrates is prepared to stop exhorting him and act just as if, having exhorted Clitophon to the care of the body, he were going to explain the nature of the body and the treatment pertaining to it, then let it happen. Clitophon agrees that the care of the soul is all-important and says he has uttered his criticism with this intention. He implores Socrates to do this so that he can stop partly praising, partly blaming him.

(c) Summing-up (410e5–8)

Socrates is invaluable for those who have not been exhorted; for those who have been, he is almost a stumbling-block in their attainment of the core of virtue and becoming happy.

For the relation between content (as analysed here) and form, cf. section 1.4.2(5).

Among other attempts³ at schematisation of the structure of the Clitophon, that by Geffcken ('Rätsel', 436) deserves closer investigation because of the conclusions he draws from it. He considers Clitophon's report of Socrates' speech, which he denies to be ironical (section 1.5.3), to be the prooemium, constructed so as to make Clitophon appear an equitable critic; the interrogation of Socrates' pupils is the narrative part, followed by 'eine philosophierende Erörterung, die den Satz von der Nichtigkeit der blossen Protrepik endgültig beweisen soll' – I am not quite sure whether 408d1–6 or 410b6–c2 is meant; finally Socrates is addressed directly for the second time (from 410a7 onwards?), and is now 'more than once sharply criticised'. This disposition is said (437) to correspond exactly to the ἔργον τοῦ ῥήτορος as defined by Theodectes of Phaselis: προοιμιάσασθαι πρὸς εὐνοϊαν, διηγῆσασθαι πρὸς πιθανότητα, πιστώσασθαι πρὸς πειθῶ, ἐπιλογίσασθαι πρὸς ὀργήν ἢ ἔλεον.⁴ The individual traits of the Clitophon are manifest also in Theodectes. According to Geffcken, the Clitophon is unmistakably an Aristotelising text, and Theodectes was a friend of Aristotle and was influenced by him. Finally, the Clitophon is a riddle, and

³ By far the most satisfactory is that of Pavlu ('Pseudopl. Kleitophon', 3–5: 'Einleitung' (406a–407a). 'Hauptteil', divided into 'I. Was Kleitophon an Sokrates lobenswert findet' (407a–408c); 'II. Was Kleitophon an Sokrates zu tadeln findet' (408c–410b), 'Schluss' (410b–e)).

This schema is taken over by Brünnecke ('Kleitophon wider Sokrates', 451–2; cf. Blits, 'Socratic teaching'), who besides distinguishes three protreptic speeches, as Kesters (Kérygmes, 39–44) after him. Souilhé (163–4) places a dichotomy at 408e2; the first part is about protreptic, the second about justice. Kunert (Necessitudo, 4) recognises two parts, the first dealing with Socrates, the second (from 408b5) with his so-called pupils. The return to Socrates at 410a7 is explained 'non ex veritatis sed ex artis quasi scaenicae, qua in dialogo opus est, rationibus' – this solution (if it deserves the name) is rightly rejected by Pavlu (5 n. 1).

⁴ Oratores Attici II 247 Sauppe; on the problems concerning the versions and ascription of this fragment, cf. Geffcken, 'Rätsel', 437 n. 1; Radermacher, Artium scriptores, 203. – Geffcken's analysis of the dialogue as a judicial accusation was foreshadowed by Brünnecke, who makes Socrates the accuser and Clitophon the defendant in a fictitious slander suit ('Kleitophon wider Sokrates', 452–7). This idea was taken over by Orwin: 'we might regard this dialogue as a kind of counter-Apology' ('Case against Socrates', 744). See section II.3.4 n. 272.

Theodectes is, in his dramas, fond of riddles. Geffcken concludes (439) that Theodectes (rather than a pupil of his) is the author of the Clitophon.

Quite apart from the dubious quality of the remaining arguments, I am unable to make sense of Geffcken's analysis of the Clitophon; if the pattern of rhetorical κατηγορία is followed at all, I would suggest A as prooemium, B as a very lengthy narrative, C (a–b) as roughly equivalent to πίστις and C (c) – the closing sentence – as epilogue (section I.3.2).

1.3 Is the Clitophon unfinished?

1.3.1 Historical Survey

Socrates' silence after Clitophon's plaidoyer does not seem to have caused especial surprise in antiquity. One explanation of it is known to us. It is attributed by Proclus to Πτολεμαῖος ὁ Πλατωνικός, who identified the missing fourth person of the Timaeus (17a1) with Clitophon: τοῦτον γὰρ ἐν τῷ ὁμωνύμῳ διαλόγῳ μηδ' ἀποκρίσεως ἤξιῶσθαι παρὰ Σωκράτους.⁵ This Platonist Ptolemy, who is mentioned also by Iamblichus,⁶ again in connection with the Timaeus, has been identified beyond doubt by A. Dihle⁷ with Ptolemy al-gharib, the biographer and bibliographer of Aristotle.

⁵ Procl. in Tim. 7b = 1.20.8–9 Diehl; apparently Clitophon was thought to have stayed away through pique (slightly different A.-J. Festugière, Proclus, Commentaire sur le Timée I (Paris 1966), 48 n. 6). Proclus does not think much of the identification: τὸ δὲ Κλειτοφῶντα [sc. λέγειν] παντελῶς ἄτοπον· παρῆν γὰρ οὐδὲ τῆι προτεραίῃ Σωκράτους διηγουμένου τίνα εἶπεν ὁ Κλειτοφῶν (namely in the Republic, 340a3–b8), ibid. 1.20.18–20 Diehl. An ingenious distortion of Ptolemy's view is given by Yxem ('Über Platon's Kleitophon', 13–14): the Republic is in fact Socrates' answer (on the premise that Ptolemy must have regarded the eighth tetralogy as a whole, so that Clitophon was in fact one of the persons to whom Socrates reported the Republic); ἐν τῷ ὁμωνύμῳ διαλόγῳ κτλ. is taken to mean 'not at any rate in the Clitophon (but in the Republic)'. This theory is taken over by Susemihl (508).

⁶ Apud Stob. 1.49.39 = 1.378 W.; cf. Festugière, Révélation, III 218 and n. 2.

There are no ancient readers known to us who explained the absence of an answer as an indication that the Clitophon was left unfinished. One reader at any rate says by implication that it was finished, to wit Plutarch, who was well acquainted with it,⁸ yet writes about the Critias ὡς γὰρ ἡ πόλις τῶν Ἀθηναίων τὸ Ὀλυμπίειον, οὕτως ἡ Πλάτωνος σοφία τὸν Ἀτλαντικὸν ἐν πολλοῖς <καὶ> καλοῖς μόνον ἔργον ἀτελεῖς ἔσχηκεν.⁹

From the sixteenth century onwards, the notion that Socrates' answer is lacking because the Clitophon is a torso becomes widespread. As far as I have been able to investigate, the first to propose this theory was Jean de Serres (in Stephanus' edition); de Serres probably advanced it to counter the hypothesis found as early as Ficino that the Clitophon is not authentic.¹⁰ An alternative hypothesis explained Socrates' silence as due to a subsequent curtailment in the transmission: the dialogue was not imperfectus (de Serres) but mutilatus.¹¹ In the course of the nineteenth century and at times in ours, some scholars have sought

⁷ 'Der Platoniker Ptolemaios', Hermes 85 (1957) 314–25; PW s.v. Ptolemaios 69), 1859–60.

⁸ He twice paraphrases Clit. 407c6–d2 with express mention of Plato: 439c and 534e. If Περὶ παιδῶν ἀγωγῆς is authentic, the beginning of the protreptic speech (407b1–4) was quoted literally by him (4e).

⁹ Sol. 32.2; I see no reason for Madvig's τὸ Ἀτλαντικόν: the Critias is referred to with its regular sub-title.

¹⁰ Cf. P. O. Kristeller, 'Marsilio Ficino as a beginning student of Plato', Scriptorium 20 (1966) 41–54 at 44 n. 12.

¹¹ So A. Boeckh, In Platonis qui vulgo fertur Minoem eiusdemque libros priores De Legibus (Halis Saxonum 1806), 11 (cf. Souilhé, 171 n. 1): Boeckh does not subscribe to this idea himself; he adduces Ptolemy and Plutarch (cf. supra) as proof that even the most ancient MSS had no more text than ours have.

- The Naughty Pleasures Bundle for free
- The Bricklayer for free
- download online In the Shadow of Greatness: Voices of Leadership, Sacrifice, and Service from America's Longest War pdf, azw \(kindle\), epub, doc, mobi
- read online The Commanding Heights: The Battle for the World Economy book
- SoulSpace: Transform Your Home, Transform Your Life -- Creating a Home That Is Free of Clutter, Full of Beauty, and Inspired by You for free

- <http://flog.co.id/library/Teens--Guide-to-College---Career-Planning--Your-High-School-Roadmap-to-College---Career-Success--11th-Edition->
- <http://schroff.de/books/The-Bricklayer.pdf>
- <http://korplast.gr/lib/Septimania--A-Novel.pdf>
- <http://www.experienceolvera.co.uk/library/The-Tesla-Legacy--Joe-Tesla--Book-2-.pdf>
- <http://ramazotti.ru/library/Before-Cort--s--Sculpture-of-Middle-America.pdf>