About the Author

Philip Wilkinson was educated at Oxford University, after which he worked as an editor for various publishers in Britain. For the last 15 years or so, he has been a full-time writer specializing in history, the arts, and heritage. He has written books on these subjects for adults and for children, and his titles include What the Romans Did For Us, which accompanied the BBC television series presented by Adam Hart-Davis, the award-winning Amazing Buildings, and The English Buildings Book. He lives in the Cotswolds with his wife and son.

Author's Acknowledgements

I would like to thank Philip Hughes, David Boardman, and Michael Fisher for their advice, Zoë Brooks for her encouragement, my literary agent Isabel Atherton for her help, and the editorial team at John Wiley (especially Samantha Clapp, Rachael Chilvers, and Kelly Ewing) for their hard work on my text.
