

The Chan Whip Anthology

A COMPANION TO ZEN PRACTICE

Translated by JEFFREY L. BROUGHTON

with ELISE YOKO WATANABE

禪關策進

The Chan Whip Anthology

禪關策進

The Chan Whip
Anthology

A Companion to Zen Practice

Translated by

JEFFREY L. BROUGHTON
WITH ELISE YOKO WATANABE

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Oxford University Press is a department of the University of Oxford.
It furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education by publishing worldwide.

Oxford New York
Auckland Cape Town Dar es Salaam Hong Kong Karachi
Kuala Lumpur Madrid Melbourne Mexico City Nairobi
New Delhi Shanghai Taipei Toronto

With offices in Argentina Austria Brazil Chile Czech Republic France Greece
Guatemala Hungary Italy Japan Poland Portugal Singapore
South Korea Switzerland Thailand Turkey Ukraine Vietnam

Oxford is a registered trademark of Oxford University Press in the UK and certain other countries.

Published in the United States of America by Oxford University Press
198 Madison Avenue, New York, NY 10016

© Oxford University Press 2015

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, without the prior permission in writing of Oxford University Press, or as expressly permitted by law, by license, or under terms agreed with the appropriate reproduction rights organization.
Inquiries concerning reproduction outside the scope of the above should be sent to the Rights Department, Oxford University Press, at the address above.

You must not circulate this work in any other form and you must impose this same condition on any acquirer.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Zhuhong, 1535–1615, author.

The Chan whip anthology : a companion to Zen practice / Translated by Jeffrey L. Broughton with Elise Yoko Watanabe.

pages cm

ISBN 978-0-19-020072-5 (paperback)—ISBN 978-0-19-020071-8 (cloth) 1. Spiritual life—Zen Buddhism. I. Broughton, Jeffrey L., 1944- II. Zhuhong, 1535–1615. Chan guan ce jin. III. Zhuhong, 1535–1615. Chan guan ce jin. English. IV. Title.

BQ9288.Z5813 2014

294.3'444—dc23

2014009445

1 3 5 7 9 8 6 4 2
Printed in the United States of America
on acid-free paper

For Hakeda Yoshito 羽毛田義人 (1924-1983)

若論此事。正如逆水撐船。上得一篙。退去十篙。上得十篙。退去百篙。愈撐愈退。退之又退。直饒退到大洋海底。掇轉船頭。決欲又要向彼中撐上。若具者般操志。即是到家消息。如人上山。各自努力。

此事的實用工切處。正如搭對相撲相似。纔有絲毫畏懼心。纖塵差別念。蘊于胷中。何止十撲九輸。未著交時。性命已屬他人了也。若是鐵眼銅睛。憤憤悻悻。直要一拳打碎。一口吞却。假使喪身失命。以至千生萬劫。心亦不忘。諸上座。果能如是知非。果能如是著鞭。剋日成功。斷無疑矣。勉之勉之。

If we are to discuss this matter: It's just like poling a boat upstream against the river current—you'll go upriver [i.e., lift the huatou/the cue to full awareness] by one pole length, and you'll fall back [i.e., produce deluded discrimination] by ten pole lengths. You'll go up by ten pole lengths, and you'll fall back by a hundred pole lengths. The more you pole, the more you'll fall back—falling back over and over again. Even if you've fallen back to the very floor of the great ocean, take the prow of the boat and turn it back around—you absolutely, positively must keep poling up towards that. If you possess this kind of ambition and fortitude, then you will arrive at the home situation. As with people who go up a mountain, each one of them makes the effort on his own.

This matter, in fact, [deliberately] puts you into an anti-thetical position—just like that of a sumō fighter about to lock horns with his opponent. The moment you harbor even the slightest thought of fear—the moment you allow even the finest dust particle of discriminatory thought to linger within your mind—how will you avoid losing nine out of ten bouts? Even before contact has been made, your life will belong to the opponent. But if you have the iron-and-copper eye [i.e., the eye that sees right through everything], if you are filled with the fury that leaves you speechless, you will smash [your sumō opponent/your cue] to pieces in a single blow—in one single gulp. Suppose you lose your life [in the process, not just in the present birth but over and over again] for a thousand births and ten thousand aeons: you will never lose this mind-set. Practitioners! If you can in this way come to know your mistake [i.e., harboring fear and discriminatory thought], if you can in this way apply the whip [of zeal], there will be a specific day that you will achieve success and chop off [the sensation of] indecision-and-apprehension. Strive on!

Strive on!

—FROM CHAN MASTER GAOFENG YUANMIAO'S
ESSENTIALS OF CHAN 高峰原妙禪師禪要 (1294)

—CBETA, X70, no. 1401, p. 706, b16-c1 // Z 2:27, p. 355, d10-p. 356, a1 // R122, p. 710, b10-p. 711, a1 (the first saying also appears in Chan Master Gaofeng Yuanmiao's Sayings Record; CBETA, X70, no. 1400, p. 686, c9-12 // Z 2:27,
p. 336, c9-12 // R122, p. 672, a9-12)

Contents

Abbreviations	xi
Introduction	1
WHIP FOR SPURRING STUDENTS ONWARD THROUGH THE CHAN BARRIER CHECKPOINTS
Preface to Whip for Spurring Students Onward through the Chan Barrier Checkpoints	63
Front Collection: The First Gate	66
Front Collection: The Second Gate	134
Back Collection: Single Gate	149
Chinese Text of Changuan cejin 禪關策進	170
Bibliography	201
Index to the Chan Whip by Section	205
Index	209

Abbreviations

- Bamboo-Window* Yunqi Zhuhong's 雲棲祿宏 Bamboo-Window Jottings (Zhuchuang suibi 竹窗隨筆) in Yunqi fahui 雲棲法彙 (CBETA, J33, no. B277, p. 44, a2-4)
Miscellaneous notes on a variety of subjects, many Buddhist
- CBETA Chinese Buddhist Electronic Text Association, <http://www.cbeta.org>.
- Chan Whip* Yunqi Zhuhong's 雲棲祿宏 Whip for Spurring Students Onward through the Chan Barrier Checkpoints (Changuan cejin 禪關策進; T.2024.48.1097c10-1109a16)
Anthology of extracts from Chan records dating from the late Tang dynasty to the Ming dynasty; also includes extracts from sutras and treatises; many with Zhuhong's appended comments
- Chikusō* Araki Kengo 荒木見悟, ed. Chikusōzuihitsu: Minmatsu bukkyō no fukei 竹窓隨筆: 明末仏教の風景. Fukuoka: Chūgoku shoten, 2007.
Annotated modern Japanese translation of Yunqi Zhuhong's 雲棲祿宏 miscellany Bamboo-Window Jottings (Zhuchuang suibi 竹窗隨筆)
- Daie sho* Araki Kengo 荒木見悟, trans. Daie sho 大慧書, Zen no goroku 17. Tokyo: Chikuma shobō, 1969.
Annotated modern Japanese translation of Dahui's Letters (Dahui shu 大慧書), mostly to laymen interested in Chan

- F (for Fujiyoshi) Fujiyoshi Jikai 藤吉慈海, trans. Zenkan sakushin 禪關策進, Zen no goroku 19. Tokyo: Chikuma shobō, 1970.
Annotated modern Japanese translation of Yunqi Zhuhong's 雲棲祿宏 anthology Whip for Spurring Students Onward through the Chan Barrier Checkpoints (Changuan cejin 禪關策進)
- K (for Kōgi) Wakao Gyōzan 若生形山. Zenkan sakushin kōgi 禪關策進講義. Tokyo: Kōyūkan, Meiji 42/1909.
Available online in the National Diet Library's "Digital Library from the Meiji Era," <http://kindai.da.ndl.go.jp/info:ndljp/pid/899711/1>.
Meiji-period course of lectures on Yunqi Zhuhong's 雲棲祿宏 Whip for Spurring Students Onward through the Chan Barrier Checkpoints (Changuan cejin 禪關策進). Many of its glosses have been inserted directly into the translation within brackets.
- Mujaku Dōchū's Kōrōju Mujaku Dōchū 無著道忠. Daie Fukaku zenji sho kōrōju 大慧普覺禪師書栲栳珠. Kyoto: Zen bunka kenkyūjo, 1997.
Mujaku Dōchū's masterful commentary on Dahui's Letters (Dahui shu 大慧書) entitled Willow Basket and Pearl (1723)
- Ming Masters* Yunqi Zhuhong's 雲棲祿宏 Abbreviated Collection of Famous Monks of the Imperial Ming (Huangming mingseng jilue 皇明名僧輯略; CBETA, X84, no. 1581, p. 358, c6 // Z 2B:17, p. 202, b1 // R144, p. 403, b1)
Anthology of extracts from the records of ten Ming-dynasty Chan masters, with Zhuhong's appended comments
- S (for Senge) Jikugyō Keizan 竺堯稽山. Zenkan sakushin senge 禪關策進箋解. Kyoto: Baiyō shoin 貝葉書院, n.d.
Interlinear commentary on Yunqi Zhuhong's 雲棲祿宏 Whip for Spurring Students Onward through the Chan Barrier Checkpoints (Changuan cejin 禪關策進) dated 1836 (corrects and supplements a lost interlinear commentary commissioned by Hakuin Ekaku's [白隱慧鶴; 1685–1768] disciple Tōrei Enji [東嶺圓慈; 1711–92]). This commentary has been invaluable in translating the Changuan cejin. It is a traditional woodblock print in two font sizes: the text itself in large font, and commentary in small font. The small-font commentary is of two formats: discursive endnote-type annotations; and words or phrases inserted directly into the large-font text to enable ease of reading. The latter have been indicated by brackets in the translation that are specifically labeled in the notes with the phrase “S ... inserts.” These notes have not preserved the differentiation between the original large-font text and the small-font commentary.

- T Takakusu Junjirō 高楠順次郎 and Watanabe Kaigyoku 渡邊海旭, eds. Taishō shinshū daizōkyō 大正新脩大藏經. 100 vols. Tokyo: Taishō issaikyō kankōkai, 1924–34.
- YQFH Yunqi Zhuhong’s 雲棲祿宏 collected works entitled Yunqi’s Dharma Categories (Yunqi fahui 雲棲法彙; CBETA, J32, no. B277, p. 565, a1; first twenty-one of thirty-four fascicles)
- Zengaku Komazawa daigaku nai zengaku daijiten hensanjo 駒澤大學内禪學大辭典編纂所, ed. Zengaku daijiten 禪學大辭典. 3 vols. Tokyo: Taishūkan shoten, 1978.
- ZGK Yoshizawa Katsuhiko 芳澤勝弘, ed. Shoroku zokugo kai 諸録俗語解. Kyoto: Zen bunka kenkyūjo, 1999. Explanations of Colloquial Words in [Zen] Records is a compilation of the researches of Kyoto Rinzai scholar-monks dating to sometime after 1804. The first section is a glossary of difficult words and phrases in Yunqi Zhuhong’s 雲棲祿宏 Whip for Spurring Students Onward through the Chan Barrier Checkpoints (Changuan cejin 禪關策進).

禪關策進

The Chan Whip Anthology

Introduction

YUNQI ZHUHONG (雲棲祿宏; 1535–1615) entitled his compact Chan anthology Whip for Spurring Students Onward through the Chan Barrier Checkpoints (Changuan cejin 禪關策進; henceforth shortened to Chan Whip). The title plays on the metaphor of “whip” (ce 策), which here has two connotations: the “whip” a horserider applies in order to spur his horse onward; and “warning whip” (jingce 警策) as a literary term for a pithy text of few words that is concise and to the point (an accurate description of the Chan Whip).¹ For Zhuhong, it is the whip that encourages “perfection of zeal or energy” (vīrya pāramitā), the fourth of the six perfections of the bodhisattva

1. This title consists of four logographs in two units, changuan 禪關 and cejin 策進. The late Edo Japanese commentary on the Chan Whip by Jikugyō Keizan 竺堯稽山, the Zenkan sakushin senge 禪關策進箋解 (henceforth S), 1a, glosses, “Guan 關. . . means gate of a border pass” [關. . . 城塞門也]. My translation is barrier checkpoints, checkpoints at the dusty border passes of China’s frontiers where the gatekeeper scrutinizes the credentials of those wishing to pass on through (section 1 makes it clear that it is plural). S, 1a also glosses, “Ce 策 means horse whip; also, to whip a horse is ce” [策馬箠又策馬曰策]. Jin 進 means advance; forward; onward. The Commentary to Guishan’s Warning Whip (Guishan jingce zhu 滄山警策註), which is quoted in section 109 of the Chan Whip, says at another point (CBETA, X63, no. 1239, p. 224, c15-16 // Z 2:16, p. 142, d12-13 // R11, p. 284, b12-13), “Guishan’s Way was transmitted to the world; he created the text called Warning Whip to warn those who are not yet awakened and whip those who have not yet advanced” [道傳天下。乃作警策。警其未悟。策其未進者也。]. The sayings record of a Ming-dynasty Linji master, the Xuedou Shiqi chanshi yulu 雪竇石奇禪師語錄, shows cejin with the direct object students (xuezhe): “The ancients’ kind similes of this sort are for no other reason than spurring students onward” [古人如此親切譬喻。策進學者。無他。] (CBETA, J26, no. B183, p. 486, a20). This has led me to supply students to the translation of the title. Xuedou Shiqi (1594–1663) was a much younger contemporary of Zhuhong. The sixth-century literary anthology Selections of Refined Literature (Wenxuan 文選, Lu Ji Wenfu 陸機文賦) states: “A text of few words that rests in the essentials is a warning-whip [jingce 警策] volume” [文片言而居要。乃一篇之警策。]. Additionally, “warning whip” (jingce 警策; Japanese keisaku or kyōsaku) refers to the long path. As he says in his preface to the Chan Whip, “With this warning whip in hand, spur your horse as fast as it will go and gallop off into the distance—smash the final barrier checkpoint of mystery!” He is simultaneously referring to a riding whip and his anthology the Chan Whip.

Zhuhong published the Chan Whip in 1600, the late Ming dynasty. However, to characterize the Chan Whip as simply “late Ming Chan” would be grossly inaccurate. It surveys most of the history of Chan literature, not just that of the late Ming, as it is a compendium of extracts, over 80 percent of which are drawn from an enormous Chan corpus dating from the late Tang dynasty (ninth century) to the late Ming. The remaining 20 percent or so consists of extracts from sutras and treatises. (For an overview, see Index to the Chan Whip by Section.) The Chan Whip was conceived by Zhuhong as a portable, convenient, no-nonsense “pocket companion guide” that addressed practitioners directly, providing not just method but morale. As such, its selections deliberately eschew abstract discussions of theory in favor of sermons, exhortations, sayings, autobiographical narratives, letters, and anecdotal sketches dealing frankly—and encouragingly—with the concrete ups and downs of lived practice.

The Chan Whip is perhaps the best practical guide to the method of Buddhist cultivation associated with the Song-dynasty Linji master Dahui Zonggao (大慧宗杲; 1089–1163), commonly referred to by the Japanese coinage kanna Zen (看話禪; Chinese kanhua Chan; Korean kanhwa Sŏn) and often translated as “observing-the-meditative-topic Zen” or the like.² Dahui’s method of practice “spread explosively and was decisive in determining the nature of subsequent Linji Chan.”³ It consists of two exercises, cross-legged sitting and keeping an eye on the cue (kan ge huatou 看箇話頭).

Interestingly, Dahui did not absolutize cross-legged sitting—he “usually” (xunchang 尋常) prescribed sitting for students, though this depended upon each student’s “illness.” He himself sometimes engaged wooden stick (bang/bō 棒) employed in the halls of Chan/Zen monasteries to encourage alertness by delivering a ritualized hit to the shoulders of monks on the sitting platform.

2. The term kanna Zen was coined by Japanese Zen scholars and adopted by Western scholars; it is not attested in Chinese Chan literature. A CBETA search does not turn it up in the vast sea of Chan texts in the collections. The terms kanhua 看話 and kan huatou 看話頭, however, are quite common in the collections.

3. Ishii Shūdō 石井修道 expresses this view of “kanna Zen 看話禪” in his chapter on Song-dynasty Chan in Tanaka, Zengaku kenkyū nyūmon, 147–48: 大慧の大成した看話禪は、爆発的に広まり、その後の臨濟禪の性格を決定づけた。Ishii is a leading Dahui researcher. For a convenient discussion of Dahui’s works and list of Ishii’s numerous Dahui in the practice at need, but insisted that sitters must not have any attachment to sitting in and of itself as an “ultimate” (jiujing 究竟) or “highest criterion” (jize 極則).⁴ Perhaps the most insightful encapsulation of Dahui’s attitude toward cross-legged sitting is found in Mujaku Dōchū’s (無著道忠; 1653–1744) Willow Basket and Pearl of Chan Master Dahui Pujue’s Letters (Daie Fukaku zenji sho kōrōju 大慧普覺禪師栲栳珠), a commentary on Dahui’s Letters: “Dahui considers the smashing of the birth-and-death mind the most important thing—this is not necessarily bound up with Zen sitting.”⁵

For Dahui, the sine qua non is not sitting, but smashing the birth-and-death mind. To this end, he recommends the practice of keeping an eye on the cue as most effective. This exercise of keeping an eye on the cue consists of constantly, twenty-four hours a day, lifting to full attention a single pivotal word or phrase, the cue, extracted from a longer Chan case (gong’an 公案). (Note: In the introduction and translation, the term huatou (話頭) has been rendered as cue. The usual renderings in the secondary literature are topic of inquiry, critical phrase, key word, and so forth.⁶ The reasoning behind this choice is articles, see Ahn, “Malady of Meditation,” 153–54 n. 77, 356–57. For a pioneering treatment of Dahui, see Levering, “Ch’an Enlightenment for Laymen.”

4. Dahui’s Third Letter in Answer to Vice Minister Ceng (答曾侍郎第三書): “It’s not that I don’t usually teach people to practice cross-legged sitting dhyāna—to do gongfu in a quiet place. This is simply a matter of providing medicine in accordance with their illnesses. In reality, there is no such thing as in-that-way [i.e., ultimate-truth] instruction of people” [雲門尋常不是不教人坐禪向靜處做工夫。此是應病與藥。實無恁麼指示人處。]. Dahui’s Second Letter in Answer to Vice Minister Chen (答陳少卿第二書): “When it is desirable to do quiet sitting, just do quiet sitting. At the time of sitting, you must not have an attachment to sitting and consider it as ultimate. At present the party of perverse teachers is prone to taking silence-and-illumination quiet-sitting as the ultimate dharma, misleading younger followers” [要得靜坐。但靜坐。坐時不得執著坐底為究竟。今時邪師輩。多以默照靜坐為究竟法。疑誤後昆。] (Araki, Daie sho, 20, 71 [henceforth Daie sho]; T1998A.47.918b4-5, 923c22-24). In his General Sermons (Dahui Pujue chanshi pushuo 大慧普覺禪師普說) Dahui says: “I frequently hear this sort of talk: ‘Miaoxi [i.e., Dahui] doesn’t teach people to do cross-legged Chan sitting.’ This also is a misapprehension. Did they ever understand upāya? I just want you to [realize that] walking is Chan and sitting is Chan—speaking and silence, movement and stillness, [all] embody calmness. There are times when I am asleep at night and wake up. I immediately get up and sit. Having sat for a while—no thought at all. I say myself [in relief]: ‘Realm of the buddhas!’ But that’s all—you must not take [sitting] as the highest criterion. [Sitting] isn’t letting go of body and life” [往往聞恁麼道却謂妙喜不教人坐禪又是錯認何曾解方便我只要你行亦禪坐亦禪語默動靜體安然山僧有時夜裏睡纔覺便起來坐坐既久都無所思自謂諸佛境界只這是然不要把為極則不是放身命處] (CBETA, M059, no. 1540, p. 849, b7-11).

5. Mujaku Dōchū, Daie Fukaku zenji sho kōrōju, 175: 忠曰以生死心破為肝要不必拘坐禪也。The manuscript is in Mujaku’s own hand (henceforth Mujaku Dōchū’s Kōrōju). Mujaku started composing this commentary in 1712 and completed it in 1723.

6. Buswell and Lopez, The Princeton Dictionary of Buddhism, 358, gives the standard renderings: “huatou. (J. watō; K. hwadu 話頭). In Chinese, ‘topic of inquiry’; in some contexts, ‘critical phrase’ or ‘key word.’ . . . Huatou (which literally means ‘head of speech,’ and thus ‘topic’) explained in detail later in the section entitled “Dahui’s Letters and the Chan Whip: The Centrality of Cue Practice.” See pp. 30-32.)

In the Chan Whip sitting practice and cue practice are called gongfu (工夫)—expenditure of energy and time in working or work; labor; effort. The term gongfu (as kung-fu) in English, probably through some sort of misunderstanding or mistranslation, has come to mean martial arts.⁷ This peculiar development has nothing to do with classical Chan Buddhist discourse. The Song-dynasty Linji master Wuzu Fayuan (五祖法演; ?–1104) in section 9 of the Chan Whip gives us an overall feel for how the term is used in the Chan records:

You must take the two characters birth-death, paste them on your forehead, and demand of yourself a clear understanding of this [matter]. If you just follow the crowd and team up with them, killing time just making a racket, one of these days the old one Yama [Judge of the Hells] will calculate the tab for your meals. [When that time comes,] don’t say I didn’t tell you! If you’re thinking of doing gongfu, you must constantly look carefully [at the cue birth-death], at every moment pulling [the cue birth-death] into full awareness. Where are you gaining energy? Where are you failing to gain energy? Where are you lapsing? Where have you not failed? There is a kind [of Han] who, having barely gotten up on the sitting cushion [to do cross-legged sitting], immediately dozes off. When he gets around to waking up, he indulges in all sorts of phantasies. Having barely gotten off the sitting cushion, he immediately starts telling a mish-mash of stories. If you practice the Way in this manner, even by the time that [the future buddha] Maitreya comes down to be reborn [in this world], you will not yet have [the thing that you seek] in the palm of your hand [i.e., you will not yet have made it your own]. You must fiercely apply energy, keep on raising this cue to full awareness, might best be taken metaphorically as the ‘apex of speech,’ or the ‘point at which (or beyond which) speech exhausts itself.’” Actually tou 頭 here is a suffix (houzhui 後綴) attached to a limited number of nouns and does not mean head.

7. Lorge, Chinese Martial Arts, 9: “The use of Kung-fu or gongfu in English [in the sense of martial arts] may be due to a misunderstanding or mistranslation of modern Chinese, possibly through movie subtitles or dubbing. In any case, it was not a word used in Chinese to refer directly to the martial arts until the late twentieth century.” Lorge remarks that the first attested mention of the term in English may be Bruce Lee’s use of gongfu in an unpublished 1962 essay; one of the first instances of the term in a Chinese source in the particular sense of martial arts is a 1984 PRC newspaper article.

probe day and night, locking it [i.e., the cue] into position. You must not do cross-legged sitting in “the tiny room behind the little door at the side of the main gate” [i.e., remain confined to the useless place of nothing-to-do]. And you must not do dead sitting on top of the sitting cushion. If miscellaneous thoughts arise in great numbers and vie with one another, gently let them go and get down [from the sitting platform] to the ground to walk around one circuit. Then get back up on the sitting cushion, open both eyes, clench your two fists, straighten up your back, and, as before, keep on raising the cue to full awareness. You will immediately become conscious of a refreshing coolness, like pouring a dipper of cold water into a pot of boiling water. If you do gongfu in this way, there will certainly be a time when you will arrive at your [original] home [of great peace and joy].

The Chan Whip served as both a “how-to” primer for gongfu and as a morale builder—there is an engaging “Answers to Frequently Asked Questions” tone to a good deal of the book. For Chan adepts, both monastic and lay, who carried this little Chan book about and perused its pages in time of discouragement or backsliding, it put a human face on gongfu.

The Career of the Compiler of the Chan Whip

The compiler of the Chan Whip, Yunqi Zhuhong, was a native of Renhe (仁和) county in Hangzhou (Zhejiang).⁸ He was born in 1535 to the Shen (沈) family; his father was of the merchant class. He began his schooling at seven, and at nine was already advanced in the classics. At seventeen he became a student at the county school, where his accomplishments were noted. From the age of twenty he was ambitious to escape the “dust” of the world (i.e., the sense objects of the samsaric world), and he hung the four characters the matter of birth-and-death is great (shengsi shi da 生死事大) over his desk, abstained from killing living beings, and became vegetarian. From his very early years he had engaged in oral recitation of the nianfo/nembutsu (念佛; the Japanese reading nembutsu will be used because it is widely recognized), and he maintained that practice throughout his life: “For my entire life I have honored nembutsu.”⁹ At thirty-one he left home to become a Buddhist monk.

8. The following biography is based on Araki, Unsei Shukō no kenkyū, 43–102. Araki’s book is an example of the “life-and-thought” genre. Here I am concerned only with laying out a brief biographical outline for Zhuhong.

He encountered a Chan teacher by the name of Xingtian Wenli (性天文理), but we do not know where this encounter occurred or what style of Chan Xingtian taught. Sometime during the next several years he made a pilgrimage to Mt. Wutai. Thereafter he also trained in the capital Yanjing (燕京; i.e., Beijing) under Bianrong Zhenyuan (徧融真圓; 1506–84) and Xiaoyan Debao (笑巖德寶; 1512–81). Zhuhong, in his comment attached to the Xiaoyan Debao section of the Abbreviated Collection of Famous Monks of the Imperial Ming (Huangming mingseng jilue 皇明名僧輯略; henceforth Ming Masters), speaks of these two teachers:

Zhuhong says, “I traveled to the capital and made a face-to-face investigation with the two teachers Bianrong and Xiaoyan, and the next year both teachers died. Master Rong was pure, of a real heart and real practice. No works by him are transmitted in the world. Master Yan lived as a recluse in the Liuxiang [district of Yanjing], seldom receiving others. There is a Xiaoyan Collection in four fascicles, and I am here scooping up a few extracts.”¹⁰

Thus his contact with these two masters must have lasted a year or so. Though short in duration, his exposure to Bianrong and Xiaoyan was crucial to his development.

Bianrong had studied Huayan teachings but left behind no works—it was from him presumably that Zhuhong inherited his later interest in Huayan. Zhuhong’s Chan style, however, derived from Xiaoyan. Xiaoyan, who was in the line of the Yuan-dynasty Chan master Gaofeng Yuanmiao (高峰原妙; 1238–95; see cover art), was given to frequent use of the Linji-style whack of the stick and thunderous shout.¹¹ Zhuhong includes an extract from a Xiaoyan sermon in his Chan Whip (section 41), and this is probably one of the few extracts he says he “scooped up” from his teacher’s Xiaoyan Collection (Xiaoyan ji 笑巖集). In this snippet Xiaoyan expounds the second and third of Gaofeng’s Three Essentials (san yao 三要) of Chan: the “faculty of great confidence,” the “determination of great fury,” and the “sensation of great indecision-and-apprehension” about the cue. (Note: In the introduction and translation, the term yi 疑 has been rendered as indecision-and-apprehension. The usual rendering in the secondary literature is doubt. The reasoning behind this choice is explained in detail later in the section entitled “Dahui’s Letters and the Chan Whip: The Centrality of Cue Practice.” See pp. 32-33.) Xiaoyan’s words in section 41 of the Chan Whip convey the impression of a hard-core master who teaches Gaofeng’s utterly uncompromising style of cue practice:

9. Bamboo-Window Jottings (Zhuchuang suibi 竹窗隨筆; henceforth Bamboo-Window) in Yunqi’s Dharma Categories (Yunqi fahui 雲棲法彙; henceforth YQFH: 予一生崇尚念佛。 (CBETA, J33, no. B277, p. 32, a8-9; Araki, Chikusō zuihitsu, 99 (henceforth Chikusō)).

10. Ming Masters: 祿宏曰。予遊京師。參徧融笑巖二師。次年二師俱示寂。融師一味實心實行。無著述傳世。巖師隱柳巷。罕接見人。有笑巖集四卷。今撮其少分云。 (CBETA, X84, no. 1581, p. 375, a5-7 // Z 2B:17, p. 218, c5-7 // R144, p. 436, a5-7).

11. Supplement to Continued Biographies of Eminent Monks (Bu xu gaosengzhuan 補續高僧傳): “At Xiaoyan’s Dharma-Hall Convocations the stick and the shout were freely dispensed” [笑巖上堂。棒喝縱橫矣。] (CBETA, X77, no. 1524, p. 484, b19-20 // Z 2B:7, p. 138, d16-17 // R134, p. 276, b16-17).

With fury produce a fresh burst of determination and lift the cue to full awareness. With respect to the final wrap-up word [i.e., the cue], you must make the sensation of indecision-and-apprehension lasting—deep and intense. Either silently probe [the cue] with your mouth closed or look into [the cue] while saying it out loud. [It should be] as if you have lost an item important to you—you must find it yourself personally, and you must get it back yourself personally. In the midst of your daily activities, at all times and in all places, have no other thought [apart from concentration on the cue].

Araki Kengo, an eminent specialist in Song and Ming thought, makes the following assessment of the relationship between the teachings of Xiaoyan and Zhuhong:

In rare cases [Xiaoyan] Debao recommended use of the nembutsu as a substitute gong’an [i.e., a nembustu-based cue], but never advocated rebirth in the Pure Land. . . . Thus, Zhuhong, who later would become highly partial towards the Pure Land school, can be said to have walked the road of turning his back on his teacher and standing on his own. And the fact that almost all the materials in the Chan transmission records trace Debao’s line through his disciple Longchi Huanyou [龍池幻有; 1549–1614] and disregard Zhuhong is a reflection of this situation.¹²

12. Araki, Unsei Shukō no kenkyū, 54: 徳宝は、念仏を公案がわりに用いることをすすめている場合も希には見られるが、浄土往生は決して唱えてはいない。．．．従つて、のちに大きく浄土門にかたむく株宏は、背師自立の道を歩んだともいえるのである。禅の伝燈を描くほとんどの資料が、徳宝の門下に[龍池]幻有をあげて株宏を無視して

- Age Becomes Us: Constructions of Bodies and Gender \(SUNY Series in Feminist Criticism and Theory\) pdf, azw \(kindle\)
- download online The Intentional Stance
- download Starting Your Career as a Musician online
- download Hooking Rugs \(Storey's Country Wisdom Bulletin A-120\) here
- read De l'un À l'autre : MaÃ@tres et disciples pdf, azw \(kindle\), epub, doc, mobi

- <http://berttrotman.com/library/Plating-for-Gold--A-Decade-of-Dessert-Recipes-from-the-World-and-National-Pastry-Team-Championships.pdf>
- <http://paulczajak.com/?library/The-Intentional-Stance.pdf>
- <http://anvilpr.com/library/Starting-Your-Career-as-a-Musician.pdf>
- <http://wind-in-herleshausen.de/?freebooks/The-Trouble-with-Nature--Sex-in-Science-and-Popular-Culture.pdf>
- <http://chelseaprintandpublishing.com/?freebooks/I-Pity-the-Poor-Immigrant.pdf>